

Uluru–Kata Tjuta National Park Notes

Anangu language

We, the traditional land owners of Uluru–Kata Tjuta National Park, call ourselves Anangu (pronounced arn-ahng-oo), and would like you to use this term for us. Very few of us speak English as a first language.

Aboriginal languages

It is estimated that prior to European colonisation, there were about 700 dialects spoken by Indigenous Australians. These languages are as different and distinct from each other as is English to Russian and Italian. Many of these languages are no longer used or are under threat of disappearing. It is estimated that there are only 20 to 50 languages still described as ‘healthy’, that is, they are spoken to and used by children.

Pitjantjatjara and Yankunytjatjara

Anangu mainly speak Pitjantjatjara (pronounced as pit-jan-jah-jarra) and Yankunytjatjara (pronounced as yan-kun-ja-jarra) and some people speak up to six Aboriginal languages. These are all dialects of the Western Desert Language, the largest language group of Aboriginal Australia. The group includes about 4000 speakers, and stretches northwest to Balgo, west to Port Headland, south to Kalgoorlie, Yalata and Oodnadatta and northeast to Alice Springs.

Pitjantjatjara literally means the people who use ‘pitjantja’ when they say ‘coming’. Yankunytjatjara are the people who use ‘yankunytja’ to say ‘going’. Anangu means ‘people’ in Pitjantjatjara and Yankunytjatjara. The grammar and structure of the Western Desert languages are very different to English. There are 17 consonants, some of which non-Pitjantjatjara speakers find difficult. There are three vowels, a, i and u, each of which may sound long or short. Sounds such as s, z, v, sh or th do not exist. Some ‘old’ words are adapted for new situations such as the word for tourists, ‘minga’, literally means ‘ants’ because the lines of visitors climbing Uluru look like lines of ants. Anangu also incorporate English words such as ‘mutuka’ for ‘motor car’.

Pronunciation

There is always stress on the first syllable of Pitjantjatjara and Yankunytjatjara words.

The letters t, n, l and r can be written with a line, called a retroflex, underneath. The retroflexes are there to remind the reader to pronounce the sound in a certain way - a different way to the same letter without the line. A retroflexed letter is pronounced by producing a sound by slightly curling the tongue back in the mouth.

SOME PITJANTJATJARA WORDS

Note: The ‘oo’ sound is the same as in ‘look.’
